

Photoshop brushes in 5 easy steps

You can create your own photoshop brushes. It is pretty simple to do, and works great. There are a bunch of brushes that come standard with Adobe Photoshop but there are occasions when you will want to make your own brushes. Don't avoid it; you'll be surprised how easy it is. Five steps and you're there!

If you can't get what you want out of the normal photoshop brushes. Make your own! If you haven't done it before, believe me, it's quite simple!

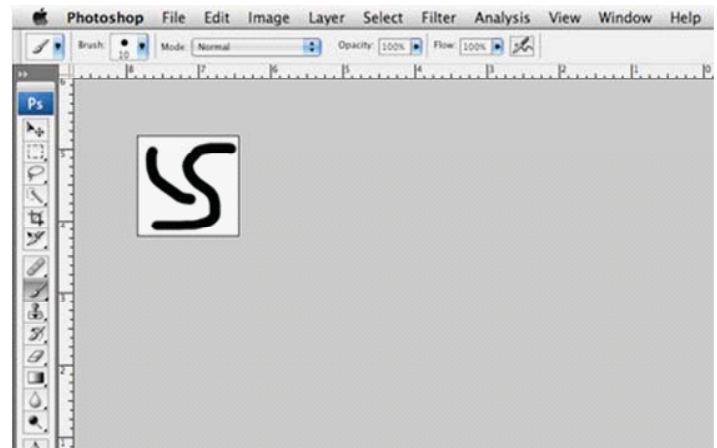

When you are working on a project and want something a little more unique....

Here are the five steps you'll need to make the brush your own.

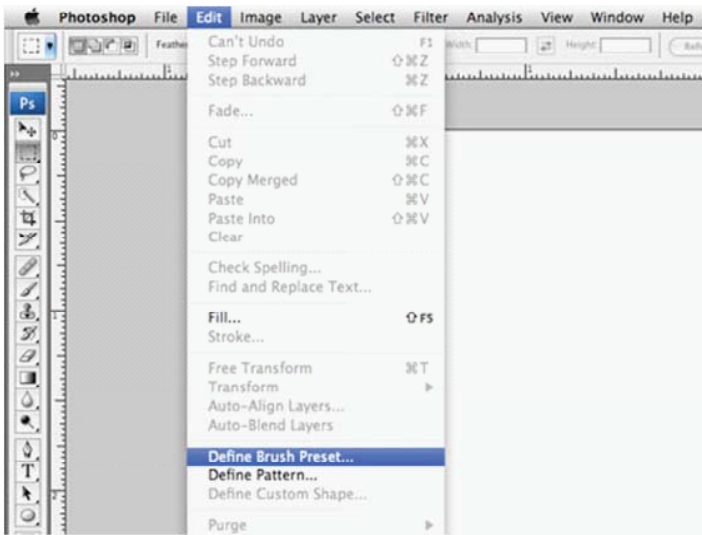

1. First create a new project. Make is 100x100 and 72dpi. It can be any size, but this canvas will define the maximum size of your brush at optimal resolution.

2. Next draw out some crazy shape you want, using a hard edge. make sure you leave the background white. (You can use anything you want, numbers, photos, brushes, logo, ANYTHING).

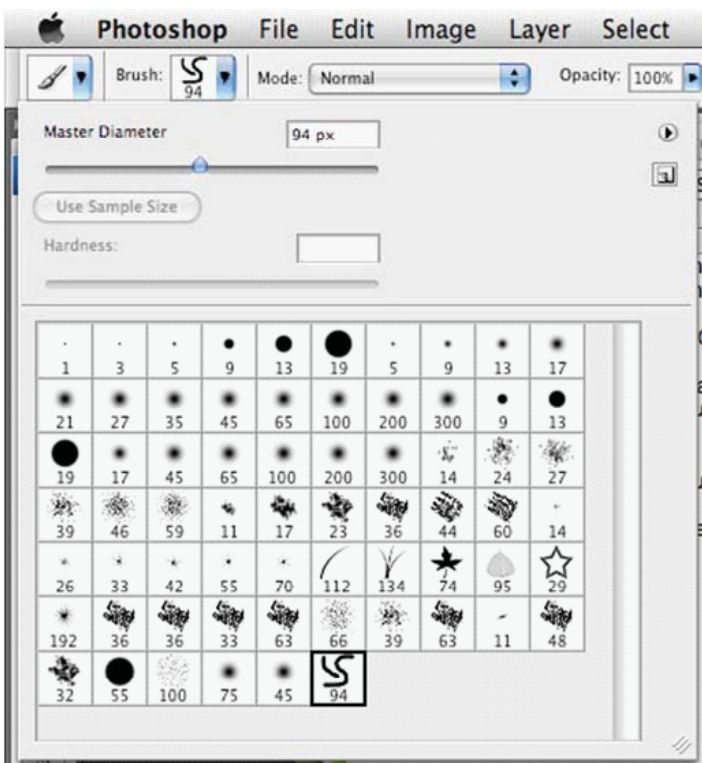

3. Under the Edit pulldown menu click "Define Brush Peset". The three little dots mean that you'll get a new dialogue box.

4. You will be prompted to name your new brush. Doesn't have to be anything special.

5. Now that you have created your brush. Select the brush tool and click the brush drop down. You may have to drag out the window a little bit to see all the brushes, but your newly created one will be at the last one.

Now create a new document and play with it! Have FUN!
